President in his inaugural address March 5.
All of the conditions outlined by the President in his message announcing the diplomatic break with Germany as leading to a state of armed neutrality have now been fulfilled. The "overt act" described by him then has actually come; if in fact it had not been committed when the President went before Congress again. Since then he has established a state of armed neutrality without the specific authority of Congress.

Washington, March 18.—Some close friends of the President declare that Mr. Wilson by no means has given up the hope of keeping the United States out of actual participation in the European struggle.

They say that he feels the end of the war is in sight, at last, and possibly very near. Much that has happened in Europe in the last week, they say, supports his belief. His single purpose now is to keep the country neutral to the end, armed neutrality, perhaps, but neutrality.
